George Muller: A Man of Prayer and Trust

Born in Prussia in 1805, George Muller was raised in a devout Christian family. However, it was not until a profound conversion experience at the age of 24 that he fully surrendered his life to Christ.

Driven by a deep conviction that God was his Heavenly Father and provider, Muller embarked on a radical path of faith. He refused to seek financial support from patrons or solicit donations but instead relied solely on prayer to meet his needs and those of the orphans he cared for.

The Orphanages of Bristol

In 1834, Muller established his first orphanage in Bristol, England. With no guaranteed income, he trusted in the Lord to provide for the children's daily bread, education, and medical care.

Over the next half-century, under Muller's unwavering stewardship, the Bristol orphanages grew to accommodate over 10,000 children. Each day, hundreds of prayer requests were sent to God, and astonishingly, not a single one went unanswered.

Unwavering Faith in Divine Providence

Muller's narrative is a powerful testimony to the faithfulness of God. He recounts countless instances where prayers for food, clothing, and funds were miraculously answered, often at the last possible moment.

His unwavering faith inspired others to believe in the possibility of a life lived in absolute dependence on God. People from all walks of life, including Queen Victoria, sought his counsel and support.

Legacy of Faith and Inspiration

George Muller passed away in 1898, leaving behind a legacy that continues to inspire and challenge believers today. His orphanages in Bristol remain active, providing a safe haven for children in need.
