Surrealism and the Uncanny

"Normal Skin Cape Poetry" embraces the tenets of surrealism, drawing inspiration from the subconscious and the unpredictable. The poems are infused with unexpected juxtapositions and dreamlike sequences, creating a disorienting yet captivating atmosphere. Just as the uncanny evokes a sense of familiarity and strangeness, these poems blur the lines between the known and the unknown, the real and the imagined.

The poet's unique vision manifests in a tapestry of vivid imagery that dances on the page. From "the moon's reflection in a dog's eye" to "a field of feathers floating in a sea of ink," the poems offer a sensory feast that will linger in your memory long after you finish reading.

Questioning Existence and Identity

Questioning Existence and Identity: Poems that grapple with the fundamental questions of life.

Beneath the surface of surrealism, "Normal Skin Cape Poetry" grapples with profound questions about the nature of existence and identity. The poet interrogates the self, the purpose of life, and the boundaries of the human experience. Through introspective musings and philosophical inquiries, the poems challenge our assumptions and invite us to contemplate the meaning of our own existence.

In a world where answers are elusive and certainties are fleeting, these poems offer a space for contemplation and the embrace of the unknown. They remind us that even in the face of uncertainty, the pursuit of meaning and self-discovery is a journey worth taking.
